Arab Courtship.

An Arab loves as none but an Arab can love, but he is also mightly excitable and easily won, An Arab sees a girl bearing vater or brush wood, and in a moment, almos at a glance, is as madly in love as if he had passed years of courtship. He thinks of nothing else, cares and dreams of nothing else tut the girl he loves, and not in-frequently, if he is disappointed in his affection, he pines and dies. In order to com-mence his suit he sends for a member of the cirl's tribe who has access to the harem, and first insuring his secrecy by a solemn oath, confesses his love and entreats his confident, to arrange an interview. The confidant goes to the girl, gives her a flower or a binde of grass and says: "Swear by him who made this flower and us also that you will not reveal to any one that which I am about to unfold to you." If the girl will not accept the proposal she will not take the oath, but, nevertheless, keeps the matter perfectly secret from all. If she is favorably disposed to the match she answers: "I swea by him who made the flower you hold and us," and the place and time of meeting are The best flowers for a sick-room are grow- settled. The King Used the Dye. A pretty story is told of the toyal pair of ltaty which is not without a moral for some women. The King's whiskers began to grow gray, which tretted Queen Margherita, who remonstrated a little with her royal spouse in the matter. The next day a bottle of hair dye was sent to his dressing-room with the Queen's compliments. The King said nothing, but at breakfast the following morning appeared with his French poodle under his arm, his fleece a rich hue from a plentiful use of the hair dy-, while his own whiskers and hair remained untouched. The use of hair due is happily not hearly so prevalent as a generation ago, but there are still plenty among us who watch with dread the muitiplication of silver in their locks, and not a few who still footishly resort to imitation color to replace them.
